

Resident Testimonial: Enjoying the Views – and the People

July 8, 2016

Margo Spielberg was among the first residents of The Residences at The Ritz-Carlton Westchester II when it opened in 2008, and she still adores what she sees – particularly when she’s gazing out from her ninth-floor corner unit.

“I love this view – it’s a real urban view,” said Spielberg, whose two-bedroom condo measures 1,757 square feet. “I can see people, I’m not so isolated from humanity. I have many friends who live in penthouses, and they have a different kind of view; they can see the water, the tops of the trees. The floor-to-ceiling windows make you feel so pastoral in a way. You’re part of what’s going on.”

She also thoroughly enjoys seeing the people. She’s grateful for the many friendships she’s developed with her neighbors.

“I’ve been fortunate to see this community grow,” said Spielberg, who works part-time after a lengthy career as a school administrator. “It’s a very diverse community – there are younger people and older people. It’s exciting.

“Every time I was on 287, and I would see the Ritz-Carlton towers, I would say, ‘I can’t wait to get home.’ ”
